

Military Entrepreneurs and the Spanish Contractor State in the Eighteenth Century

Rafael Torres Sánchez, Universidad de Navarra

- Offers new insights into the role of military entrepreneurs in debates about warfare and state construction
- Shows how an entrepreneur's success or failure could determine whether or not warfare became a driving force of the economy and wealth or an endless source of problems
- Brings Spain and its idiosyncrasies to wider notice to provide crucial insights for European and international comparative history

Provides a new interpretation of the military entrepreneurs' role in state construction in early-modern Spain, demonstrating how their success or failure could determine whether or not warfare became a driving force of the economy and wealth, or an endless source of problems.
